RESISTANCE TO THE VIRGINIA SEARCH LAW. -A correspondent of the South Side Demoerat, writing from Hampton, Va., on the 11th inst., about the late seizure of the schooner Maryland, for the refusal of the captain to permit a search, says: "There was a plot entered into by several Northern vessels lying in the Bay, to resist the law of inspection and to aid in nullifying its object. A party from these vessels attempted to board one of our pilot boats with cowhides and bludgeons, for the purpose of making personal reprisals, but were most effectually resisted, as they will ever be in their iniquitous course. Such is the hostility manifested, that the pilots have found it necessary to desire the Inspector General to apply to the Governor for arms to protect In the House of Representatives, various themselves and enable them to carry out the purposes of the law more effectually."
